Introduction

Developments and Plans for the Future for Ethnic and Racial Studies

Martin Bulmer and John Solomos

With this issue we complete Volume 33 of Ethnic and Racial Studies. This has been another successful year in the development of this journal, as reflected in the quality of the regular articles that we have published and in the articles included in the five Special Issues we have produced in 2010. The impact of the journal on the wider scholarly communities has been reflected in the increased Impact Factor we have been awarded in the ISI Social Science Citation Index for 2009, published in 2010. It is also evident in the increased volume of high quality submissions that we receive in the Editorial office from an increasing range of countries and research groupings. During both 2009 and 2010 we have seen significant increases in the submission of both regular and special issue articles to the journal.

In part as a result of this increase we have decided, in consultation with our publishers, to move to producing 12 issues of Ethnic and Racial Studies per year in 2011. This reflects our commitment to ensuring that the journal is able to publish a wide range of high quality, cutting-edge articles which meet our stringent refereeing standards. It will also enable us to plan ahead in terms of including Special Issues as a regular part of this journal in future. We now have a range of Special Issues in process which will take us to 2013 and beyond.

Ethnic and Racial Studies has been part of the evolution of scholarship and research on race, ethnicity, migration and nationalism which continues to play an active role in professional activities that relate to the work of the journal. In May 2010 we held our Annual Lecture at City University London, given by Ann Stoler from the New School for Social Research. This attracted a large audience composed of both established and younger scholars.

3 We also held events linked to the journal at the International Sociological Association
4 Conference in Gothenburg (July 2010) and the American Sociological Association
5 Conference in Atlanta (August 2010). Both events allowed us to publicise the work of the 6 journal to broader audiences and to establish contact with the relevant research committees of 7 the associations.

15 We have also worked closely with Routledge Journals to improve the scope and coverage of 16 our Book Reviews section. We know that this is a section of the journal that many of our 17 readers find of interest and we have moved to fully integrate the book reviews into our 18 Scholar One electronic management process. This has allowed us to process books in a 19 timely manner and to make sure that we publish reviews of the most recent books in our field
20 as early as possible. It is our aim to continue to maintain and to broaden the international 21 reach of this journal. This is more of a challenge in relation to books to be reviewed than it is 22 for articles to be considered, but we continue to work to improve our coverage. Ethnic and 23 Racial Studies is committed to international reach in the material which it publishes.

37 Following our practice last year, we are once again publishing in this issue, the last of the 38 year, a list of all the referees that have helped us by looking at articles as part of our 39 refereeing process. At the risk of stating the obvious, we are aware that we would not be able 40 to maintain the high scholarly standards of the journal without your hard work. A number of 41 our referees are members of our International Editorial Board, who number sixty-five 42 scholars across eighteen countries. As the coverage of the journal expands, we rely also 43 upon the advice and support of referees from a wide range of countries, disciplines and fields 44 of research. To all who have acted as referees for ERS, a big thank you for your efforts and 45 we look forward to your continued support in the future. Without this selfless voluntary 46 interest in the articles which we received, we would not be able to publish the high quality 47 material which it is the aim of the journal to disseminate.
